Friends of the Children New York (FOC), based in Harlem, is a unique early-intervention program dedicated to helping some of New York City’s most at-risk children become productive, contributing members of their community. Modeled after a program in Portland, Oregon, it was founded in 2001 by Howard Clyman, who served as Executive Director until 2007. FOC deliberately selects those children in its community’s kindergarten and first-grade classes whom its staff, in cooperation with teachers and other school personnel, assesses to be the most in danger of school failure, abuse, neglect, juvenile delinquency, gang and drug involvement, and teenage pregnancy. Each child is assigned to a full-time, paid, professional college-graduate mentor, a positive, consistent, and supportive adult, with whom he or she spends at least four hours a week, mostly one-to-one. The first cohort of children selected is now in the tenth grade, and the expectation is that each child will remain in the program through high school. The target outcomes are to finish high school with a plan for the future, to avoid the criminal justice system, and to avoid teen parenthood.

Mr. Clyman early recognized the need of the children and their families for mental health and social work support services, and the grants from the Leeman Foundation, beginning in 2006, have been directed to this part of the program.

Robert Houck, the current Executive Director, has increased the number of children served by FOC, and has enrolled the organization in a national study of the effectiveness of the mentoring program provided by FOC in New York and by several affiliated organizations around the country.

Besides its important mission, this worthwhile program exemplifies several highly commendable attributes: first, from the beginning, it recognized and addressed the needs of its children comprehensively, not solely in terms of academic achievement; second, and also from the start, it built in ways of evaluating the work it was doing with the children; third, it accomplished an unusually successful transition from a founding Executive Director to one who is leading the organization through its next stage of growth; and, fourth, it has shown flexibility in modifying its program to serve the changing needs of its clients as they develop into adolescents.

The past year was a challenging one for the Foundation, because of the difficult financial climate, which has only deteriorated since June 30th. We took on no new grantees, and the total amount of our grants declined 13% from the year before. In contrast to its growth during the previous four years, the value of our endowment declined 13% during the past year, and now is 24% smaller than at its peak eight years ago.

We have continued to augment the grants we make with other forms of assistance to our grantees. One forum for doing this is our Annual Grantees’ Breakfast Meetings, designed to keep our grantees in touch with one another, and to facilitate the exchange of ideas, the identification of common issues, and the exploration of new ways in which all of us can help one another. The Tenth Annual Meeting, held in February 2008, was a particularly lively one, which led to two follow-up symposia, one on social work and mental health.
Because we try hard to provide ongoing support to a limited number of outstanding organizations, we take on very few new grantees, and Friends of the Children New York is the only one of the last five years. While we are committed to that way of operating, we also want the Foundation and its grantees to be exposed to new approaches from time to time. For that reason, we hope to take on at least one new grantee in the coming fiscal year, in spite of the adverse economic climate.

History and Mission:
The Stephen and May Cavin Leeman Foundation is a family foundation established in 1969 by Stephen and May Cavin Leeman. It was originally called the SEARCH Foundation (Science, Education, Art, Research, Conservation, and History), reflecting the broad interests of the founders.

In its early years, the Foundation focused its activities in Rockland County, NY, the founders’ home community. Significant projects included the preservation of the birthplace of Edward Hopper in Nyack, NY, the development and publication of a historical Portrait of West Nyack, the giving of Nyack and West Nyack Community Awards, the promotion of a Rockland County anti-litter campaign, and the support of a Bias Awareness Workshop in Upper Nyack.

From 1988 to 1994 the Foundation funded a free cardiovascular screening program operated by Nyack Hospital, and from 1991 to 1994 the Foundation supported the Fellowship of Reconciliation, based in Rockland County, in several of its peace-promoting activities, including the establishment of the F.O.R. Peace Library.

Following the deaths of Stephen Leeman in 1993 and May Cavin Leeman in 1995, the leadership of the Foundation passed to the next generation of the family. The headquarters of the Foundation were moved to New York City. The Directors decided to shift the Foundation’s focus to programs serving needy children and youths in New York City, with an emphasis on relatively small agencies, with grants for projects where we believe that our limited resources can make a tangible, demonstrable difference.

Guidelines for Applicants:

Fields of Interest:
Our focus is on programs serving needy children and youths in New York City. Consideration also may be given to programs in the arts and humanities, education, environmental preservation, health and human services, and peace, especially when they involve work with young people. Relatively small programs in the New York metropolitan area are favored.

Restrictions:
No grants are made to individuals.

Application Information:
A prospective applicant should submit a preliminary letter of interest not more than two pages long. After receiving a favorable response, you may submit an application on the Foundation’s Initial Grant Application Form, available on line at www.guidestar.org. Since decisions on grants are made throughout the year, there is no deadline for applications. Reports are expected from grantees at least once a year, and there may be other requirements.
